

put him in the hole all over the country if given enough headway, and that he is contemplating firing Andy Lawrence and breaking with the Chicago Publishers' Trust.

Hearst's division men, in charge of the circulation and distribution of his newspapers in the various parts of the city, went on strike today.

Twenty-five union stereotypers returned to work on the trust newspapers at the request of International President James J. Freel.

The 25 stayed at work almost as long as ten minutes and then they gathered up their hats and coats and walked out again.

They were told flatly that the open shop was going to be the rule in Chicago trust newspaper offices hereafter. Also they were told that the number of stereotypers employed in each office was going to be reduced at once.

The five who returned to the Journal had two negroes pointed out to them. They were told that the negroes were to be their workmates, and that their first duty, now that they had returned to work, was to teach the negroes something about stereotyping.

So that ended the return to work of the stereotypers.

The Printers' Union held a meeting in Bricklayers' Hall last night for the purpose of taking a strike vote. The hall could not accommodate all the printers who came to attend the meeting and the taking of a vote was put off until Sunday.

SOMETIMES.

The

Early

Worm

Catches

The Bird.